

Institutional Aid Programs

Students are responsible for payment of all tuition charges, regardless of what type of funding they may obtain. Title IV funding that a student may be eligible for based on the determination of the Federal government, in a combination of loans and grant funds, may not be enough in itself to pay for all tuition charges in all cases. Therefore, students may pay for this difference in the following ways:

- 1) From their own funds
- 2) By borrowing the necessary funds from a bank or lender of their choice, or by
- 3) Applying for an institutional loan from Remington College.

Loans from private lenders are made solely on the criteria and requirements of those lenders, and Remington College has no decision making authority on which students may/may not qualify for a private loan for educational purposes.

Institutional Loans

Institutional loans from Remington College are made on a student by student basis. Monthly payment requirements for an institutional loan depend on a number of factors, including the program the student is enrolled into, anticipated or estimated Title IV aid, and academic year need. Remington College reserves the right to limit the amount of loan funds available to specific students for tuition related expenses. The Student Finance Department at the campus the student is enrolling into can provide additional information regarding institutional loans.
